TOUGH DAN LYONS PUT ON TRIAL FOR

When he was Last at the Bar it was for Burglary, and a Woman had Betrayed him to the Police-He Takes it Coolly. The trial of Daniel Lyons, or "Danny' Lyons, as he is called among the toughs of the east side, for the murder of Joseph Quinn, the well-known athlete, on the evening of July 5 last, began before Recorder Smyth in the General Sessions yesterday morning. It promises to draw as large a house as the trials of the

Lyons was brought over from the Tombs a few minutes before 11 o'clock. He was smooth shaven, though his heavy blue-black beard showed under the skin and made his anything but preposeessing face all the more unpleasant to look at. He wore a gray suit with a blue polka dot necktie, and his hair was plastered down about his forehead in the approved tough style. He walked to his seat with a touch of swagger in his bearing, and he looked about him without the slightest evidence of emotion. His attorneys, Stephen E. Blake and Thomas

, Sullivan sat one on each side of him. It took all day and the whole panel to get leven men into the jury box. At the outset it looked as though it were not going to be such a very tedious task the getting of the jury. Two or three gentlemen only had been excused for fixed opinion before John F. Gidney came upon the scene, and after a sharp examination on the part of Mr. Martine for the people and Mr. Sullivan for the prisoner, was accepted, and took the foreman's seat in the box. Mr. Gidney is a dealer in millinery goods when he is in business, which he isn't now, though he confided to the Court that he expected to be in October. He lives at 283 West Forty-ninth street, Very soon after Mr. Gidney came Mr. Philip Dolan of 511 East 116th street, no business, and an experienced juryman, a fact of which he spoke with pride.

The District Attorney's questions bere principally upon the candidates' acquaintance with either the friends of the murderer. The defence wanted to know if the candidates belonged to any athletic clubs. Quinn was a member of the Pastime Athletic Club and had many friends in the New York, the West Side, the Crib, and several other clubs. He was considered one of the best "all-round" amateur athletes in the city.

Lyons sat looking listlessly about while this work wont on, though he talked occasionally with his attorneys and seemed to have a languid interest in a little horn-handled cane which rested upon the District Attorney's table. It was the cane which Quinn had in his hand when Lyons shot him.

At 4:15, when there remained just one more seat in the box to fill, the clerk announced that the panel was exhausted.

"I suppose we will have to adjourn over, Mr. Martine," said the Recorder, "though I dislike to do so. Those jurymen who falled to respond to their names as they were called aro fined $100 each."

The crime for which Lyons is being tried for his life attracted a great deal of attention from the fact that Quinn the murdered man was so well known and so popular. He was a margin clerk in the Coffee Exchange, and he lived at 301 East. Thirty-eighth street, corner of Second avenue, with his father, two sisters, and a brother. It was on the stoop of this house that he was shot at 6 o'clock on the evening of the 5th of July last. Lyons was known to the police as a thief, a barroom lounger, and general tough. He lived in a furnished room not far from the scene of the murder, though he spent most of his time in the lowest drinking places of the neighborhood. About four years ago he broke into a bird store in the Bowery and stole several parrots and other birds in valuable cages. Two of the parrots he gave to a girl panned Mollie Bender, whom he had mot at Billy McGlory's. Lyons and the girl quarrelled subsequently, and the girl informed the police of the burglary, and Lyons was sent to Sing Bing for two and one-half years. He had been out of prison about eight months when he killed Quinn.

His version of the deed, as given at the time

Stilled Quinn.

His version of the deed, as given at the time of his arrest in Pittsburgh a few weeks after it occurred, is that Quinn had threatened him repeatedly, and had struck him over the eye on one occasion because he (Lyons) had declined to "do up" Post Office Inspector Mechan at Quinn's request. On the night of the murder, Lyons said he happened to be passing by Quinn's, and the latter was standing on the sidewalk talking to two men. When Lyons appeared Quinn advanced on him and threatened him, and Lyons pulled his pistol and fired. The version given by others is quite different from this. Lyons, some people say, was ened him, and Lyons pulled his pistol and fired.

The version given by others is quite different from this. Lyons, some people say, was jealous of Quinn's attentions to a girl named Medowan. Whether this was so or not, Lyons repeatedly threatened to "lix" Quinn, and attacked him on one occasion a few days before the shooting. Quinn, owing to his superior strength, was able to do about as he pleased with his assailant. He was at last obliged to knock him down, and Lyons picked himself up, and wont off vowing vengeance. From that time on he is said to have gone about from barroom to barroom boasting of his intention to "fix" Quinn, and tapping his hip pocket. On the afternoon of the murder he was lurking about Quinn's residence, During his prowlings about the neighborhood he met Quinn's father, an old man over 70 years of age.

"I'll send you a present home to-night," he said, as he passed the old gentleman on the sidewalk. The present came, and it was the dead body of the old man's son. Quinn, the younger-he was about 22 years of age, by the way; Lyons is 30-came up town on a Second avenue car, and alighted at his door. It was a very hot night, and he sat down on the stoop to read an evening paper. Lyons approached, and, according the friends of Quinn, crept up and shot him unawares. The ball entered the groin and Quinn bled to death in about two hours. All that he was able to say about the shooting was:
"It was an old grudge; Danny Lyons shot indexis. All that he was able to say about the schooling was:

"It was an old grudge; Danny Lyons turned me."

Instantly after the shooting Lyons turned and fied down First avenue. He was chased by several citizens, but escaped. Supposed friends of Lyons in the crowd pointed out to policeman Harrington a man who, they said, was the murderer. He proved to be George Vance, a rospectable eigar maker. Lyons was not heard of again for many days. Then he turned up in Pittsburgh under the name of George Allen. He had been to Chicago, where he got abort of meney, and worked his way to Pittsburgh. At Pittsburgh he was arrested while attempting to pawn stolen silver. The Pittsburgh police had a photograph of Lyons, and notified the New York police that they thought they had got him. Lyons made little attempt to conceal his identity and none whatever to avoid going to New York.

A few days after the crime and Lyons's escape the police arrested Alexander Neil, a milkman, of 127 East Seventy-sixth street, and Jack Corr, a barkeeper in a barrroom at Twenty-sixth street and Third avenue. They were suspected of knowing something about the shooting. Lyons, it was said, went to Corr and told him he was going to "do up" Quinn, and asked to borrow Corr's pisted. Corr said that he had none, but that his brother, who was a barkeeper at Flifty-second street and Third avenue, had one. So they went to the latter place, where they fell in with O'Neil, who volunteered to lend Lyons his pistol, and went to his home in Seventy-sixth street and Third avenue, had one, but that his brother, who was a barkeeper at Flifty-second street and Third avenue, had one. So they went to the latter place, where they fell in with O'Neil, who volunteered to lend Lyons his pistol, and went to his home in Seventy-sixth street to get it. Lyons took it, and it was with this weapon, it was claimed, that the murder was committed, Mr. Quinn, the murdered man's father, says that Lyons was an any with Culin because the latter had refused to recommend him for some p It was an old grudge; Danny Lyons shot

LIVES LOST IN A SOUTH STREET PIRK

Two men lost their lives and a third was severely burned in a fire that broke out on the third floor of the four-story brick building at 10 South street at 6:50 o'clock yesterday m ing. The building, with the second and third floors of 11 South street adjoining, was occupled by Mrs. Mary A. McNally as a lodging house, and was known as the Central Hotel. Mrs. McNally ran a saloon on the first floor of saloon when the cry of fire was raised. He ran up stairs and found the halls full of smoke. He rapped upon all the doors, rousing the in-mates, until the smoke got so dense that it drove him down stairs. He ran to the corner of Broad street and sent out an alarm. About fifty persons slept in the house on Sunday night, but about twenty of the number had left the building and gone to work before the fire broke out. Those on the upper floors of the house made at once for the fire escape. Mrs. McNally and her two young sons slept on the third floor in a room with win-dows, directly back of the fire escape. She put her children out upon the balcony. on the third floor in a room with windows, directly back of the fire escape. She put her children out upon the balcony, and men from the street carried them down. She descended alone, but was burned about the wrists. Her mother, Mrs. Fagan, 67 years old, slept on the top floor of No. 11. Her son, who occupied a room on the same floor, roused her and carried her in his arms to the adjoining building, where he put her on the fire escape, and she went down in safety unassisted. Murdock Stuart, a young lumber handler, was in a rear room on the second floor of No. 10. He woke up and found flames eating through his door. He tried to make his way to the fire escape, but gave up the attempt and jumped out of the rear window of his room. He was not injured by the fail, but was burned about the face, hands and arms, and was taken in an ambulance to Chambers Street Hospital. Stuart's home is in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia.

The building was all ablaze on the upper floors when the engines arrived. No more persons aspeared at the windows. After an hours hard fighting the fire was pretty well out, and the firemen went into the building. In a rear room on the top floor of 11 they found the dead body of Nelson Lampman an old canal boat captain. Lampman was in bed. He was hadly burned, but had died of suffocation. His romains were taken to an undertakers at $2 Greenwich street, where they were recognized later in the day by his son and daughter, who live at 95 Park avenue, Hoboken. Lampman was 70 years old, and has lived at the Central Hotel for two years. He was disabled by rheumatism. His rolatives said that when they saw him on Sunday he had $40 and a silver watch. His clothing was burned up, and the watch was not found in the room. In a room near Lampman as the firemen found the corpse of Thomas Grogan. Grogan was about 20 years old. He went to the hotel early on Sunday evening, and engaged a room for a week. Nothing is known about him. His death is attributed to suffocation.

Commissioner Bayles told the doctors of the Contagious Diseases Bureau yesterday that all infectious complaints reported will be referred to them, and that they must see that every patient is isolated, and, when isolation is impracticable, removed to the hospital. In case of death the remains must be interred as speedily as possible, and no public funeral must be allowed. Physicians who are found to be delinquent or tardy in reporting cases of contagious disease must be reported to the Health Board, so that they may be prosecuted.

President Bayles reminded the doctors that the undertaker who recently held a public funeral in the case of a victim of diphtheria escaped remishment because the prosecuting health officer could not swear that it was a case of diphtheria. He hoped such a thing wouldn't happen again.

The new departure is expected to do a great deal toward stamping out diphtheria, measles.

BUSTLES AND BRIBES.

Four Women and One Man Caught Smug-gling by Customs Inspectors. It was a busy day yesterday for customs inspectors, both men and women. Inspector Scherman refused a bribe to pass some goods for a passenger on the Trave, and captured: Seven books, two boxes of medicine, twelve linen sheets, three cases draughtsmen's instruments, six table clotha, one needle case, thirty-six linen napkins, twelve towels, one pocketbook; seventy-two linen handker chiefs, six fancy handkerchief boxes, seven boxes toys, one card case, one looking glass, seven pieces ribbon, fifteen dolls and twelve umbrelias. one card case, one looking glass, seven pieces ribbon, affreen doils and tweive unbrellas.

Inspectors Malvina S. Wilson and Cynthia M. Westover decided that the Misses Evans, Fraulein Charlotte Weinmann, and Mrs. S. H. Harbridge, who arrived respectively on the libral and and the Trave, were altogether too large bustles. The wearers were invited into the private examination roomson the wharves. In the bustles of the Misses Evans were fifty-five yards of silk, a gold watch, and a gold bracelet. In the bustles of Mrs. Harbridge and Fraulein Weinmann were two meerschaum pipes and one cherry wood pipe, fourtieen yards of silk, thirteen yards of velvet, and thirteen yards of velvet, and thirteen yards of satin, and in the trunk of the fraulein were three silk shawls, sixteen yards of silk, and fifty yards of linen, No mention was made of these goods in the declarations of the fair ones, and Uncle Sam seized them.

"Yes, it was the calling out all the time that made father ill," said one of his daughters, "and if he recovers we will not let him go back to the same work. He is 69 years old, and not able to stand it. He had an easier place, but he took that one because it paid better, and we needed the money."

Within four years Mr. Fowler has lost his only son, and each of his daughters has buried her husband, ranid Tells the Story of the Bible

The examination in the case of Stiles D. Baldwin, known among his intimate friends as Butt Baldwin, who was accused of malicious Butt Baldwin, who was accused of mailcious mischief and assault by Mrs. Clara A. Fernald of 83 Fort Greene place, took place yesterday in the Adams street Police Court, before Justice Walsh. The room was crowded. Mrs. Fernald is a large, fine-looking woman. She was dressed in rich black satin and lace, and she wore considerable jewelry. Baldwin is a smooth-faced young man, with light brown hair and blue eyes. Mrs. Fernald related with much composure the exciting adventure which took place at her home shortly after midnight on Sept. 7. She said: The bell rang about 12% o'clock and I went to the door. Baldwin and a friend stood outside, and both were intoxicated. I said to Baldwin: 'You mustn't come in; it is too late.'

He said: 'I will come in,' and with his friend he pushed his way past me. I tried to put him back, but he got hold of me by the neck and he pushed his way past me. I tried to put him back, but he got hold of me by the neck and shoulders and threw me back against the stair rail. He then went into the front parlor and ilt the gas. I called for assistance. At this he came after me, and I rushed away and locked myself in the back parlor. He came to the door. I again told him to leave the house, and said I would call a polleeman if he did not do so. When I came out of the room he dragged me into the front parlor and kicked me. I again went into the back parlor and locked the door. He tried to force it open, but could not, and a minute later the glass was broken. A Bible and album had been thrown through the four panes of glass. After the glass was broken Baldwin and his friend left the house."

On cross-examination by Lawyer Wernberg Mrs. Fernald said:

"Mr. Baldwin had frequently visited the house, but I cannot say how often. He never remained for more than an hour at a time, and never spent a night in the house. I have been married, but I obtained a divorce from my husband. I am not positive whether there were any other persons except my son and myself in the house that night. There are other persons staying with me, but I do not inquire into their movements, knowing that they are gentlemanly and proper. I did not make the charge of assault until a week after the occurronce. I carry on dressmaking, but there is no sign to that effect on the house, Mr. Baldwin called and offered to send a glazier to repair the damage, but I would not agree to that. Some reference was made to $16, and I said that if he wanted to settle it for that amount he could do so."

Mr. Wernberg said that he would not offer any defence. It was admitted that Baldwin

Some reference was made to $15, and I said that if he wanted to settle it for that amount he could do so."

Mr. Wernberg said that he would not offer any defence. It was admitted that Baldwin and a friend were in the house, and that they had done wrong in going there in an intoxicated condition and acting as they had done. He had offered to repair the damage, and the Court should take that into consideration. The charge of quesault was evidently an after thought, as it was not made until Saturday.

Justice Walsh said that the matter would have been a very serious one for the accused if it had not appeared that he had been a frequent visitor at the house. He thought that Mrs. Fernald could not have been very much hurt or she would have made the charge of assault in the first place. He then sentonced Baldwin to pay a fine of $10 for assault, and $50 for malicious mischief, or in default to go isil for twenty-nine days. The fine was paid. Mrs. Fernald, it is said, will begin a civil suit for damages against Baldwin.

ALLEGED PROCEEDS OF A SWINDLE Drafts Here!

The drafts sent to the Merchants' Exchange Bank by George Montagu Clinchwood, who is at present under arrest in Berlin on a charge of swindling two Englishmen in Geneva, Switzerland, out of £8,000, were the subject of a mo-tion in the Supreme Court yesterday morning. The result of Mr. Clinchwood's operations in Geneva appeared in this country in the shape of two drafts for $20,000 and $5,000. The Merchants' Exchange Bank refused to handle them and also refused to give them up to Mr. Clinchwood's representative. Mr. Clinchwood's viotims, secured an attachment against all of the latter's property in this country.

Lawyer Franklin Bien, who had been retained by Mr. Clinchwood, appeared before Judge Van Brunt yesterday and secured an attachment first against his client's property in order to secure his retaining fee of $2,500 which he said had been promised him for his services in any event. If he succeeds in his efforts to save the results of Mr. Clinchwood's enterprises he is to receive $2,500 more. The attachment was granted, and then Mr. Bien made a motion to discontinue the attachment secured against his client's property by Mr. Lord. He pointed out three errors in the affidavit, which he said was very loosely drawn and was not good in law, Judge Van Brunt concurred in his opinion, and the attachment was dissolved. Now Mr. Bien is going to begin an action against the Merchants' Exchange Bank in an effort to compel the payment of the drafts. He says that the bank lilegally held the drafts in the face of an order from the rightful owner, and that payment upon them can now be compelled.

Surrogate Rollins decided yesterday a novel point, arising in the matter of the estate of D. J. Stack, whose will left everything to his widow, Elia M. Stack, and her child, Heien. The will was contested by Stark's ather, Thomas, on the ground that Ella was not the father, Thomas, on the ground that Ella was not the widow because D. J. Stack had no right to marry, having been divorced in this state in November, 1883, from Eva Stack. The following December he want to Philadelphia and married Ella, by whom he had had a child in the provious March, before he was divorced from his first wife. Surrogate Rollins holds that if the child Helen is the daughter of Stack she may inherit as his child under the law of Pennsylvania, which legitimises a child born before the marriage to the parties who marry. The Surrogate permits Thomas Stack to introduce svidence on the question whether the child Helen is really the daughter of his son.
